

PC World and Good Gear Guide(National) 28th August 2007

Reviews

Product Reviewed by Andrew Kliem

Circulation 50,402 ABC

Page 2 of 2

online, over the phone and overseas. Apply now.

Review Specifications Comments (0)

The Sudio Linc is a simple USB dongle that gives your PC Bluetooth connectivity. It doesn't do anything fancy, but for those longing for a little extra wireless functionality at a low cost it may be just right.

It comes with a set of drivers on an 8cm DVD and they installed without hassle. We were then given the option to scan for surrounding Bluetooth devices, all of which were picked up quickly. It only took a further few seconds to connect to our pair of Bluetooth headphones.

The connection remained strong throughout our testing, with no drop outs or signal weakening. Using the Linc is basically identical to using a notebook or PC with built in Bluetooth.

Other options are available in the software package too, including automatic wireless file transfer, remote camera connection and Bluetooth radio.

Aesthetically the Linc is nothing special. It looks just like a regular USB flash drive and thus it can be plugged in and hidden away at the back of your machine. Of course it is also light weight and relatively durable, meaning it is easy to take on the road.

- Andrew Kliem (PC World)

Related Products
Hard Disk Drives (External)
LCD Monitors

Buying Guide
Notebook Accessories

PC World Business

Tech@Work Home

Mobile Phones / Wireless & Roaming

Networking / Telecoms & VoIP

Notebooks / Desktops / Printers / Monitors

Security & Email

Software Development

Servers & Storage

Specialist Provider Guide: Business Software